

TIMOTHY JENKINS

willing to serve as School Board President ready to fight to save DC's PUBLIC SCHOOLS

A long time resident of Shaw/Logan Circle, Jenkins served as trustee, president, and law professor at the University of the District of Columbia. Among his civic activities, he served as a volunteer executive with the Church Association for Community Services to create high-tech afterschool youth training; worked for years with the Washington Urban League and the People's Involvement Corporation to start school-to-work economic development programs; served on the National Instructional Television Board to bring distance learning to innercity schools.

Jenkins will fight to make DC Schools better tools for local empowerment by

- Improving Academic Preparation to Take High Grade DC Jobs
- Making DC Students Prepared & Confident for College
- Rebuilding Quality Vocational Facilities & Programs
- Boosting High-Tech Career Guidance & Training
- Assuring DC Graduates' Inclusion in DC's Booming Economy
- Reducing Student Drop-outs and Casualties
- Restoring DCPS to be Competitive with the Best
